a MUSEUM for ME calendar 2021

Traditionally, museums have been spaces where the objects that our societies consider important can be preserved, researched, and exhibited. Today museums are doing so much more to document memories and stories - our intangible heritage - and to integrate the worldviews of women, children, minority groups, and many other social groups who were previously under-represented.

Museums are places where we can participate by sharing our experiences to help create a better world. They are spaces where all of us are welcome and where we can critically discuss the past, the problems of the present and the future.

We invite you to create your own calendar. Choose moments, from your past or your future, that are important to you: remember and draw memories that you find relevant to you, or try to imagine what the events of the future will be like.

misreated, damaged, assaulted - that it is us, who have laid out the dead, who have had our bodies taken, as if they were loot, to understand that it is time to abandon indifference, and that our stories, are not myths or legends, but a reality, which everyone should know about.
